

What are your web goals?

Contributed by Mike Robichaud

Tuesday, 29 May 2007

Last Updated Thursday, 06 September 2007

A successful web presence is one that is thought out and planned well. What do you want to achieve with your site? Are those goals realistic? Many companies suffer from the "if you build it, they will come" syndrome, envisioning that if they put up a website, or give their current site a make-over, a flood of new customers will come.

That is not a realistic goal.

We can help you organize your thoughts and goals on paper and transform them into a world class web presence. We act as advisors for many of our clients, helping them realize their goals through various technology based tools. Is there a new technology out there that could make your life easier that you don't know about? Your web presence shouldn't be a burden, it should be something you are proud of and bring up in conversation at every opportunity! Technology is suppose to make your life easier and your business more productive.